INTRODUCTION TO VOL. XXXIX

I

THE Index contained in this volume is the work of many years, and its final preparation has entailed a great amount of labour while the Edition has been going through the press. The time and trouble of the editors have been given unsparingly, both as a duty to the subscribers and as a necessary service to Ruskin's memory. There is no author whose works require an index more than Ruskin; and the thought that a General Index to his books, fit, full and sufficient, would one day be compiled, would, the editors know, have given him great satisfaction.

Much indexing of Ruskin's books was done, and printed, during his lifetime. The first index to the Stones of Venice was his own work (1853).<sup>1</sup> An index to Modern Painters was made for him by some schoolgirls and printed at the end of the fifth volume (1860).<sup>2</sup> He himself made an index to Letters 1-48 of Fors Clavigera (1873, 1876),<sup>3</sup> and some indexes to the first volumes of Deucalion (1879) and Proserpina (1879).<sup>4</sup> His other books appeared in the first instance without indexes.

The assistance of friends supplied the omission. In 1880 Mr. Wedderburn collected Ruskin's Letters to the Press in Arrows of the Chace, and in 1885 his miscellaneous writings in On the Old Road. Both these collections were provided with very full indexes. In 1885 Mr. John Morgan printed an index to the pictures mentioned in Academy Notes. In 1887 Mr. Faunthorpe completed an index to Fors Clavigera. Meanwhile Mr. Wedderburn had started, to Ruskin's great delight, upon indexing the earlier works; the new index to Stones of Venice appeared in 1886, that to Modern Painters in 1888, and that to Seven Lamps in 1891. These indexes, in their detail and attempt at logical analysis, constituted something of a new departure in index-making. The index to Modern Painters contains over 10,000 references, and in the authorised editions of the work now current forms a sixth of the book. Ruskin used to say that the making of these indexes was doing the best possible service to him and his teaching. Mr. Wedderburn next indexed every book by Ruskin as a new edition was called for, and also made a MS. index to the "Works Series." Mr. Collingwood in like manner indexed the books which he edited—Poetry of Architecture, Lectures on Architecture and Painting, and Elements of Drawing, and Mr. Cook, the various pamphlets and catalogues collected in Ruskin on Pictures. Of unprinted material, there was an index by Mr. Wedderburn to Proserpina; and Mr. Cook had prepared for his own use from time to time, beginning in school days at Winchester, a general index to Ruskin, with an analysis of Modern Painters. All this material has contributed to, and been embodied in, the present Index, which may thus be called the work of many years.<sup>1</sup> It was the existence of the old indexes, and of the other material just described, that enabled the editors to supply so many cross-references during the progress of the Edition through the press.

II

With such material in hand, the first question which the editors had to decide concerned the form in which Index references were to be given. They would have been saved a great deal of trouble if the old references (to chapters and numbered sections) had been retained, but this plan would have been inconvenient in the present edition, which contains so much new matter. The plan of giving a double system of references (so that the Index might in a measure have been available for the previous editions of Ruskin) was upon reflection rejected. Considerations of space were decisive against it. Moreover, this Library Edition is intended to be, and is likely always to be, the "Reference Ruskin," and as such may be expected to find a place in most permanent libraries, private and public, in this and other countries.

<sup>1</sup> The preliminary preparation of index-slips for the hitherto unprinted matter, as well as for the notes and introductions, was the work of Miss Slaughter. Much re-arrangement has, of course, been necessary, and it has often been convenient to combine several references under a new heading. The index, as finally presented, is the work of the two editors; Mr. Wedderburn having done the letter a (except Art and Artists), the Bible, and the letters d, h, i, j, k, n, o, q, u, v, w (with some exceptions), x, y and z, and Mr. Cook, the rest; and the whole work having then been subjected to a joint revision.

The next question to be decided was whether to supply separate indexes to the several volumes, or to reserve the main indexing for a final volume. The former course would have involved the less labour; but the latter was dictated by various considerations.<sup>1</sup> One of these is the discursive nature of Ruskin's books and the elusive nature of their titles. Suppose, for instance, that it were desired to ascertain what Ruskin had to say about eagles. A reader, not well versed in Ruskin's ways, might naturally suppose that he would find it all in The Eagle's Nest. He would find something, though not much, about eagles in an index to that volume; but the more numerous of Ruskin's references to them occur incidentally in other writings. Or, again, a reader who desired to know what Ruskin had said about various modern artists might content himself with looking at the index of Modern Painters; but, with the partial exception of the first volume, that book is much more concerned with old masters than (Turner excepted) with new. A series of indexes to the several books would have required a reader to look for the same title in a large number of separate indexes. As it is, a reader desiring to ascertain what Ruskin has said about any topic—as, for instance, a painting, or a poet, or a cathedral, or a statue, will find every reference to his hand in the General Index which occupies this volume. The amateur of art, the biographer, the student of literature, the traveller, the social reformer, the economist, the educationalist, the lover of birds, flowers, mountains or minerals, the careful reader of the Bible, of Dante, of Scott, each and all will by this Index be enabled for the first time to find, clearly brought together in one place, the references which Ruskin scattered through a hundred different books, lectures, pamphlets and letters.

A further, and an equally cogent, consideration pointed to a General Index, of a somewhat special kind, as indispensable to any intelligent study of Ruskin's works. His writing covers a period of more than half a century. He discussed as a youth many of the subjects to which he returned in later years. And, again, he seldom wrote with qualifications and reserves. He put one side of a question at one time, and another at another time. A series of Indexes to the several books would not, in themselves, suffice to illustrate his teaching. There is no author who more requires a complete and reasoned Index, bringing his references into true proportion and relation. "The work of Ruskin," says a French expositor, "is a forest where paths and branches cross each other without end."<sup>1</sup> It is the business of this Index to Ruskin to provide clues and clearances.

The need of such an Index, and the hope that it might one day be supplied, were often in Ruskin's mind. On one occasion he was called upon to summarise his views upon the place of art in education. "The principles have been stated somewhere," he said, "in as short English as I could write. The difficulty is to find them! I can't always now myself."<sup>2</sup> "I have left the system of my teaching widely scattered and broken," he said at another time, "hoping always to bind it together some day."<sup>3</sup> Even in a single volume, devoted ostensibly throughout to the same subject, Ruskin had to regret that the references to any one topic were of such "desultory occurrence" as to require a careful analytical index.<sup>4</sup> How much more is such an index required, when the whole volume of his writings is taken! To understand his scheme aright, he said of another branch of his work, "a patient comparison of different passages is necessary."<sup>5</sup>

Among the innumerable schemes, which came the thicker as his power of fulfilling them diminished, was one for a series of summary chapters in which he should take various subjects—such as theology or natural philosophy—and give explanatory references to the several passages which he had written upon those topics, indicating their modes of connexion.<sup>6</sup> "I want you," he wrote to a friend in 1879, "to find out all my wisest bits and choose the wisest of the wise, and then put all the other bits that are like it, round it—or in a row beside it—and then, when you've quoted the pretty ones, say 'compare' the others up and down the books. . . . And don't hurry, and let the order rather tumble into your head and hands than be sought for."<sup>7</sup> His friend was "to be a little sieve—to catch what's good, not let it through;" but she was not to bother about indexing things that did not interest her. Few persons, if any in this world, would be equally interested in everything that Ruskin wrote about; but an index-maker has to be omnilegent, and to be above, or below, all prejudices and preferences.

What should be included in an index? How many and what kind of titles should there be? Macaulay said, "The best rule is to keep close to proper names, and never to deviate from that rule without some special occasion."<sup>1</sup> In the case of a History, this may be a good rule, but it is wholly inapplicable to the case of a miscellaneous writer. The titles here must be very numerous, and double entries may often be advisable. Again, while the leading principle of arrangement in a particular article must of course be alphabetical, even this must sometimes be sacrificed for the sake of logical clearness. "Alphabetical indices," said Ruskin, "will be of little use, unless another, and a very different kind of index, be arranged in the mind of the reader;"<sup>2</sup> an index explanatory of the principal purposes and contents of the various parts of the text. And he proceeded, in an introduction to his Indexes of The Stones of Venice, to analyse its contents in logical sequence. This is what the present Index aims at doing for the whole body of Ruskin's Works.

III

The foregoing remarks will have served to illustrate the principles which have governed the preparation of the Index. A more precise account of its general scheme and scope may now be given.

Its object is twofold. It seeks to enable those who consult it to find where Ruskin has said a particular thing, and also to learn what he has said on any particular subject. It is hoped that these two objects have been combined effectively.

With regard to the former object, the promise was made in the Preface to the Edition that the Index would "in some measure serve the purpose of a Concordance." The multitude of its titles, the fulness of its references, and the frequent inclusion of the catchword of a sentence will be found, it is believed, to redeem this promise.

The number of titles in the Index cannot be far short of 25,000. Every topic treated or mentioned by Ruskin, and every proper name which occurs in his works are included.<sup>3</sup> Wherever, too, he discusses the use or meaning of particular words, they are indexed;<sup>4</sup> and the attempt has been made to include also words which Ruskin coined, or which

<sup>3</sup> Special care has been taken to leave unindexed no subject touched on by Ruskin or relating to his life. The editorial matter of the edition, though sufficiently treated, has not been indexed with the same minuteness.

he applied in some peculiar or distinctive sense, or the use of which is rare in English literature.<sup>1</sup>

The fulness of the references may be gathered from the fact that they are more than 150,000 in number.

And, to take but two examples of catchwords under a single letter, if the reader will refer to (1) Soldiers and (2) Station, he will find, under (1), references to the frequent insistence by Ruskin on the "watch-word" of his political economy—Soldiers of the Ploughshare as well as of the sword; and, under (2), references to his repeated deprecation of the over-importance attached to the keeping up of appearances in this or that station in life. Or, to take a different kind of example: many of Ruskin's most eloquent passages include Bible phrases, or quotations, it may be from Dante or Shakespeare, or from some other great author; and any of these passages may be found by turning to the entries under Bible, Dante, Shakespeare, and so forth. Ruskin quoted some books very often, and many books sometimes.<sup>2</sup> Of his thousands of allusions, nearly all have been traced in this edition and appear in the Index. Only a few remain for some future gleaner to supply.<sup>3</sup>

The collection of passages from the various authors, cited or referred to by Ruskin, and similarly the cataloguing in the Index of his references to particular artists and places, have been laborious tasks; but <sup>1</sup> As, for instance, acarus, amphisboenic, anatomiless, argutely, audit, aurochs, bacterian, berry-head, blanch, central, curricule, diluents, drumly, effectism, entasis, episcopal, erubescant, euphuist, evincing, expatriotic, feverous, geognostic, hateliness, hedghoggy, hierographics, hircine, illth, insighted, intercolumniate, involuere, jessed, jolterheads, monocondylous, multilemma, nosology, omnilegent, personate, plasma, remora, ringent, scalpellic, scrannel-pipest, scumbled, simial, sinisterity, styptic, tourniquet, vandyke, verditer, and vespertilian.

<sup>2</sup> Ruskin often did not give his references; and when he did, occasionally gave them wrong—sometimes naturally enough in one quoting from memory, as in confusions between Coleridge and Wordsworth. A reader in turning up references in the Index will thus occasionally find a quotation attributed in the Index to one author, but by Ruskin, in the passage referred to, to another. A case in point is that of the saying—"Tout ce qui se peut dire de beau est dans les dictionnaires, il n'y a que les paroles qui sont transposées." Ruskin quotes this three times in the course of his works; attributing it once (correctly) to Boileau, twice (incorrectly) to Molière.

<sup>3</sup> The unindexed quotations are these:—"Arabian web packed in a walnut shell," 15, 401; "best for ourselves, best for others," 18, 455-6; "Clara's first ball," 35, 196; "diabolic fire," 35, 250; "the English Church has never appealed to the madness or dulness of her people," 20, 63; "for glory and for beauty," 3, 483; "il ne faut que de l'argent," 22, 506; "if water chokes, what will you drink after it?" 5, 370; "Love that groweth unto faith," etc., 19, 208; "tonsile shades," 3, 627 n.; "the violent bodily labour, which children of all ages agree to call play," 11, 152; "wanting the good of virtue and of being," 8, 284; "when science has done its worst, two and two still make four," 6, 66; "white and wailing fringe," 13, 14; "whose changing mound and foam that passed away," etc., 5, 211; and "with blood of kings and queens," 4, xxvi.

one less difficult perhaps than the fulfilment of the second object of the Index, in the case of general topics. The voluminousness of the references to be arranged has necessitated many long, and some very long, articles in the Index. In these cases a system of subdivision was essential, more or less elaborate according to the number of references which had to be dealt with. In the case of some articles the most convenient system of subdivision was obvious; as, for instance, with authors and artists, to separate general references from references to their particular works. The case of large subjects—such, for instance, as Architecture, Bible, Dante, Painting, Ruskin, Scott, Shakespeare, Turner, Venice—required more consideration. The general idea which has been carried out in such cases—with modifications as each article might suggest—is to divide the entries into, first, a collection of leading ideas or principal passages, and then into a series of reasoned classes. It is, therefore, essential that a reader, before beginning a search in any of the long articles, should carefully peruse the system of subdivision as explained at the head of the article.

The methods thus adopted for facilitating reference, and for providing clues, as said above, through Ruskin's forest, have entailed a great expenditure of time and thought in analysing, classifying, and weighing references; how great, will best be understood by those who have most experience in such work. The result will, it is hoped, have justified the labour; for it will be seen at once that this volume is much more than an ordinary Index of reference; it is also in many cases an analysis of Ruskin's work. By way of example, attention may be called to such articles as those on Art, Beauty, Education, Labour, Land, Landscape, Museums, Political Economy, Sculpture. Ruskin distrusted systems and system-mongers; yet he held that there was a logical coherence in his thoughts, though he knew that it was obscured to careless readers by his discursive manner of writing.<sup>1</sup> In the case of the articles above cited, and in that of many others, this Index arranges in a logical order thoughts and discussions which Ruskin scattered through many books and in many different connexions.

IV

In concluding their long task the editors have the pleasant duty of expressing their thanks generally to the many friends, subscribers, and students who in one way or another have rendered them assistance.

More particularly are they indebted to Mrs. Arthur Severn for the elucidation of many personal points which she alone was able to furnish. Mr. W. G. Collingwood, who was for many years in close connexion with Ruskin, and who is known to all readers of Ruskin for his biographical and editorial work, has also often assisted the editors with information. Similar assistance has been given by Mr. Alexander Macdonald, in connexion with Ruskin's work at Oxford, by Mr. William White and Mr. Gill Parker in connexion with Sheffield, by Mr. Faunthorpe in connexion with Whitelands College, and by the late Mr. George Allen and the late Mr. William Ward in many particulars. In the verification of references to English literature, the editors were helped by Miss Margaret Baird, the late Professor Churton Collins, the late Mrs. E. T. Cook (Vols. I.-IV.), and, above all, by Mr. R. A. Potts. In the case of references to Greek and Latin literature, Mr. A. M. Cook (Sur-Master of St. Paul's School) has given constant assistance; in that of references to Dante, Dr. Paget Toynbee has rendered a like service. In various connexions with Turner, information and assistance have kindly been given by Mr. A. J. Finberg and Mr. W. G. Rawlinson; and, with Venice, by Mr. Horatio Brown and Dr. Alexander Robertson. To Mr. J. P. Smart the editors are indebted for assistance in supplying various cross-references and for other work in connexion with Fors Clavigera. Mr. Hugh Allen collaborated in the Catalogue of Ruskin's Drawings; whilst in the reading of final proofs, Miss Grace Allen has, from the first volume to the last, rendered valuable aid. Finally, suggestions and corrections from many sources are embodied in the Addenda (Vol. XXXVIII.), and the editors desire to thank all the readers who have thus helped them.

RELATION OF THE GENERAL INDEX

To Special Indexes in Earlier Volumes

THE special indexes included in this Edition are as follows:—

Vol. XIII. (pp. 597-646). Index of Works by Turner at any time in Ruskin's Collection, and Index of Drawings, etc., by Turner belonging to the National Gallery.—These Indexes serve special purposes; but every work by Turner mentioned in the course of the Edition is included in the General Index.

Vol. XIV. (pp. 312-23). Index to Academy Notes.—This is an Index of Artists with lists of the works by them mentioned in the Notes. The name of every such artist is also included in the General Index, and in some cases the particular works are again specified; in other cases, the General Index has been shortened by means of a reference only to the particular index.

Vol. XIV. (pp. 449-54). Index of Drawings by Prout and Hunt in the Exhibition of 1879-80.—Where noted by Ruskin, either in that or in any other volume, the drawings are included in the General Index.

Vol. XXI. (pp. 319-31). Index to the Examples in the Ruskin Art Collection at Oxford.—This Index also serves a special purpose, and should be consulted by those interested in the Collection. It would obviously have been useless repetition to have enumerated the examples again in the General Index under "Oxford, Ruskin Art Collection"; but the topics referred to in Vol. XXI. (topics including artists and subjects) are included in their several places in the General Index.

Vol. XXV. (pp. 185-6). Index to Birds mentioned in Love's Meinie.—The references here given are all incorporated in the General Index.

Vol. XXV. (pp. 553-69). Three Indexes, by Ruskin, to Proserpina.—Every name of a plant given in these Indexes is included in the General Index; but the references to particular varieties are not in every case given in complete detail. A reader interested in Ruskin's proposed system of botanical nomenclature would therefore do well to look at the Proserpina Indexes, as well as at the General Index.

xx RELATION OF THE GENERAL INDEX

Vol. XXVI. (pp. 585-90). Index (Ruskin's) to Subjects in Deucalion.—All these references are incorporated in the General Index.

Vol. XXVI. (pp. 591-605). Index of Minerals mentioned in the Deucalion Volume.—All the main names are incorporated in the General Index, and most of the sub-heads; but it will be well in the case of minerals to consult this special Index also.

Vol. XXIX. (pp. 607-76). Index to Fors Clavigera.—This is of interest, as explained in that volume (p. 607), as being for the most part Ruskin's own work, but it is not in any sense exhaustive. Fors is fully dealt with in the General Index; where, however, many of the references in Ruskin's Index are given under different headings. A reader, therefore, who desires to trace some passage in Fors, and does not immediately find it in the General Index, may possibly be helped by consulting also the special Fors Index.

Vol. XXX. (pp. 289-93). Index to the Examples in the Ruskin Museum at Sheffield.—The remarks made under Vol. XXI. above apply also here.

Vol. XXXI. (pp. 95-98). Index to Xenophon's Economist.—This is an index, not to Ruskin, but to topics treated by Xenophon, and is therefore not included in the General Index.

Vol. XXXI. (pp. 319, 320). Index of Words noted in Rock Honeycomb.—It has not seemed worth while to include in the General Index every reference to verbal annotations on Sidney's Psalter; but where Ruskin's remarks are of any interest apart from their immediate context, the words are included.

Vol. XXXII. (pp. 335-36). Index of Names in Roadside Songs and Christ's Folk.—This is an Index to work not by Ruskin but by Miss Alexander, and the references are not as a rule included in the General Index. The names of principal characters to which Ruskin himself refers are included.

Vol. XXXVI. (pp. cxiii.-cxv.) and Vol. XXXVII. (pp. xv.-xviii). Lists of Correspondents to whom the Letters in those volumes are addressed.—The names are all included in the General Index; though, in the case of correspondents to whom letters in those volumes are numerous, the references are often given in a summary form.

Vol. XXXVIII. (pp. 99–108). Index to Division I. (Works by Ruskin) of the Bibliography.—All titles of Ruskin's books, articles, lectures, etc., are included in the General Index under Ruskin (Subdivisions II. 36, 37).

„ (pp. 191–96). Index to Division II. (Works about Ruskin) of the Bibliography.—Where Ruskin himself mentions such books, and in many other important cases, the names of authors or periodicals are included in the General Index; but it has not seemed necessary to repeat the whole body of this special Bibliographical Index.

„ (pp. 217–306). Catalogue of Ruskin's Drawings with Index References.—Reference to this Index has been made in the case of the more important groups of drawings, but not in that of every individual piece. Any one wishing to know if Ruskin drew a particular place or subject should, therefore, look up the name in the Index of Drawings, though it may also occur in the General Index.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE USE OF THE INDEX

With Explanations of Abbreviations, etc.

For the general scheme and scope of the Index, the reader is referred to the Introduction.

In the case of the longer articles in the Index, the reader is particularly requested to read first the synopsis at the beginning of each of them.

Abbreviations.—The most frequent abbreviation is that of “R.” for “Ruskin.” The titles of Ruskin’s books are also abbreviated; but these abbreviations, and others used in the course of the Index, will, it is believed, readily explain themselves. The only one which seems to require preliminary explanation is “C.S.G.,” meaning “Companion of St. George’s Guild.”

Order of references.—Where an article is short and the references are not analysed, or where there are several references after one analytical sub-head, the order of the references is according to their occurrence in volumes and pages. Occasionally, this principle is broken and a reference to a later volume is printed in front of a reference to an earlier one; in such cases the reference given first is distinctly the more important. In some cases a reference is followed by another in brackets; this means that the bracketed reference is to Fors, from which an identical passage was reprinted in Præterita (Vol. XXXV.).

It should be noted that references are sometimes to passages at which further references will be found in editorial notes.

The author is indexed under Ruskin; titles of his books, etc., are given alphabetically under Ruskin (II. 36, 37).

Buildings, Churches, etc., are as a general rule indexed under the place in which these are situated.

Illustrations in this Edition are not grouped together under the head "Illustrations," but are included under their respective subjects. As, however, the large majority of them are from drawings by Ruskin or Turner, the separate Catalogue of Ruskin's Drawings (Vol. XXXVIII.) serves in large measure the purpose of an Index to the Illustrations, while under "Turner" in this Index will be found those by Turner.

Pictures, and other works of art, are as a rule indexed fully under the names of the several artists. Where this rule has not been adhered to, a cross-reference is given. Occasionally they are indexed, also fully, under the gallery or other place where they are situated; but considerations of space have made such repetition impossible in all cases. Cross-references, in such latter cases, are given; thus under "Paris, Lowre," references are given to the names of all artists by whom there are pictures in the gallery which Ruskin has noticed.

Saints.—Individual Saints are indexed, not under "St.," but under their Christian names: St. Benedict, under "Benedict," and so forth. But names of places or persons with the prefix "St."—St. Albans, the St. Bernard, Saint-Hilaire, etc.—are indexed under "St."

Art [As far as possible this article is confined to passages which deal with Art generally; it should therefore be supplemented by reference to Architecture, Painting, Sculpture, and similar headings. The subdivisions are:—(1) Aphoristic sayings, descriptive of Art as conceived by R. (2) Origin, and Definition, of Art; R.'s uses of the term. (3) Classification of the Arts. (4) Ideas conveyable by Art. (5) Essence, Function, and Mission of Art. (6) Characteristics of Good and Great Art. (7) Art in relation to Religion, Religious Art. (8) Art in Relation to Morals. (9) Art in relation to History, the History of Art. (10) Art in relation to Social Conditions. (11) Political Economy of Art. (12) Art in relation to Use. (13) Art as affected by Climate, Materials, etc. (14) Art in relation to Science, Anatomy. (15) Education in Art. (16) Christian Art. (17) Historical Art. (18) Modern Art. (19) Particular Schools of Art. (20) Particular Arts

It will be seen that so far the arrangement is mainly logical; both in the sequence of the several subdivisions, and in the order of the references under each of them. Classification, however, sometimes overlaps, for R.'s leading conceptions in Art are closely connected. A few passages giving points of connexion may here be indexed:—Art being the formative action of a spirit, the character of the deed necessarily depends on that of the doer, 19, 165, thus the connexion of art and morals. Art depending on the character of the doer, the first essential to good a. is right education and good social conditions, thus the connexion of art with those subjects, 26, 338, 27, xviii-xix., 29, 137. And finally to R., "the teaching of art is the teaching of all things," 29, 86.—(21) The final subdivision, containing Miscellaneous References, is arranged alphabetically, so as to serve also as an index to the necessarily long article on Art]

(1) Aphorisms, descriptive of art as conceived by R. [The references here are not exhaustive; other similar sayings will be found indexed lower down; but it has seemed well, as an introduction to the subject, to collect some leading passages descriptive of R.'s point of view]

Art is nothing but a noble and expressive language, 3, 87<sup>1</sup>; the greatest a., that which embodies the greatest number of the greatest ideas, 3, 92, 5, 19, 66, 11, xix.

All great a. is either truth or praise, 8, 11 n.; its object is to praise God, not to display man's dexterity, 3, 24; is praise, 4, 153 n., 7, 463, 15, 351, 33, 305, 34, 310 (cf. 23, 236); the praise of something that we love, 14, 444 ("all Mod. P. in a nutshell"), 15, 353, 354; you will never love art well, till you love what she mirrors better, 22, 152-3; high art consists neither in altering nor in improving nature, but in seeking throughout nature for "whatsoever things are lovely," etc., 5, 58; the expression of man's delight in God's work, 7, 263, 9, 70, 13, 29, 16, 290, the expression of man's rational and disciplined delight in the forms and laws of Creation, 3, 22, 15, 351

Every great work of art is an assertion of moral law, 29, 266; an artist is a person who has submitted to a law which it was painful to obey that he may bestow a delight which it is gracious to bestow, 28, 441

<sup>1</sup> This is an early passage (Mod. P., vol. i.), written when R. was laying special emphasis on the expressional power of art. It will be seen from the subsequent references that in his later writings he laid equal stress on art as a formative activity.

Art is the formative action of a spirit, 19, 165; the art of any country is the exponent of its social and political virtues, 20, 39; great art is nothing else than the type of strong and noble life, 16, 287; great art is the expression of the mind of a great man, 7, 235, 249, 19, 389, the expression by an art gift of a pure soul, 19, 392-3; the expression of a mind of a God-made great man, 5, 189, the expression of a good and great human soul, 11, 11, 201, 212, 16, 122, and noble according to the greatness of the soul, 9, 445, 11, 220

(2) Origin and definition of art, R.'s uses of the term:—

It will be seen from the preceding aphorisms that R. means by art, "fine art," and except in passages which show the contrary he is so to be understood, 22, 150-1; also, that he distinguishes between real art and false, 20, 85. It should further be noted that R., though he has much to say on Literature and Music (q.v.), and traces many analogies between these and other arts, does not as a rule include them in his references to "Art," which generally refer only to Architecture and the Graphic Arts (including Sculpture), 20, 200, 204

In the larger sense of the word, R. defines a. as "the modification of substantial things by our substantial power," 22, 125

As distinguished from manufacture, 16, 293 seq., 29, 587, a. is the operation of the hand and head, 16, 294, working with tools of men, 9, 455-6, 16, 295, 20, 304, 308; art applied to manufacture distinct from m., 15, 12

Fine art, as distinguished from the lower arts, the operation of hand, head, and heart, 16, 294, 385, 11, 202 n., 19, 391, 20, 46; the hand at its finest, the heart at its fullest, 16, 385-6, the hand, not mechanism, 22, 220, photography (q.v.), not art, 11, 241, skill of hand not the essence of a., 11, 220, the hand working submissively to the head, 22, 347; the heart by itself no good, 18, 152, application of the whole strength and subtlety of the body, 20, 304, fine art, distinguished from handicraft (e.g. in architecture, by ornament), 12, 84

Fine art is thus the work of manhood in its entire and highest sense, stamped with the artist's "Behold, it is I," 11, 201-3, the work of the whole spirit of man, 19, 168, 391, 463; hence function of the workman, 10, lviii., life of the workman, 16, 429; art valuable in proportion to the quantity of humanity (thought, skill, etc.), 9, 444, 456

The origin of a., beginning with scratched lines, 22, 319-20, is the imitative instinct, 20, 220-3; man like a child with a doll recreating himself, 20, lvi., representing a world to play with or to worship, the realistic or idolising instinct, 20, 223-7; to which is added, in nations with progressive a., the instinct of order and discipline, 10, 205, 20, 228-9, art becoming human labour regulated by human design, 20, 165, producing its effects "with true reason" (Aristotle), 19, 170, 20, 45; hence its objects to be rational, 20, 302

Being instinctive in origin, all great nations have it, as a necessary fulfilment of human function, 18, 463-4, 19, 57, 167; it is the only language of early races, 20, 32-3; and becomes a means of expression for the highest faculties, 18, 463; passion for, as a test of national energy, 20, 221

Order of the arts, clay, wood, stone, metal, painting, 20, 46; chronological order, architecture, sculpture, painting, 12, 182

(3) Classification of the Arts:—

"Of the Division of Arts," ch. i., A. F., 20, 199 seq. The Arts (with which R. was for the most part concerned), are divided into (i.) Graphic, involving skill, beauty, likeness; (ii.) Architecture, involving skill, beauty, use, 20, 96. The Fine Arts of Painting, Sculpture, Architecture are, however, not logically separate from the Formative Arts (e.g., carpentry, pottery), 20, 200-1

Logical division (i.), Arts giving colours to substance; (ii.) giving form without question of resistance to force; (iii.) form or position capable of such resistance, 20, 201-3; practical importance of this division, 20, 203-4

Any of these three arts may be either (a) imitative, or (b) limited to useful appliance, 20, 204; in respect to (a) Sculpture and Painting are united as Graphic Arts, 20, 201, 222, 22, 150

Also all of them, in addition to any imitative or structural purpose, add to it an element of inherent pleasantness, colour and form their means of delight, 9, 455; the musical, harmonic element; study of this rightly called "aesthetics," 20, 205-7, perception of such qualities dependent on moral state, 20, 207-9 (see further under Beauty), these musical qualities inexplicable, 15, 205

The arts are thus either subservient to life, or the objects of it; greater dignity of the former, 4, 32-3

Arts may otherwise be classified, according to methods and aims, etc., as:—aiming chiefly at Line, Light, or Colour, etc. (see Painting); Contemplative (or Constant), or Dramatic, 19, 203, 23, 205, 326-7, 37, 136, 144-5; Creative or Realistic, 33, 304; directed to Facts, Design, or both, 10, 217, 16, 269

(4) Ideas conveyable by Art (sec. i. Mod. P., 3, 93-115, 5, 171:—

(i.) of Power; difficulties conquered a source of pleasure, 22, 322; in Painting, 3, 93-8, 116-32 (for detailed references, see Execution, Power); in Architecture, "Lamp of P.," 8, 100-37 (for detailed references, see Power)

(ii.) of Imitation (i.e., deceptive imitation), 3, 93, 99-103, 116 (for detailed references, see Imitation)

Comparative unimportance of these two sets of ideas, 3, 116

(iii.) of Truth, see below, subdivision (12) of this article

(iv.) of Beauty, 3, 93, 109-11, 4, throughout, etc., etc. (for detailed references, see Beauty)

Skill ("ideas of power"), 3, 88 n., and beauty, preliminary essentials in a., 5, 53, 55, 20, 96; the noblest art adding noble facts and noble conception to good execution and noble composition, 10, 216, 33, 299

(v.) of Relation (Thoughts), 3, 93, 112-5, 7, 203
The three latter sets of ideas the most important, R.'s essential teaching with regard to them, truth apprehended by the soul, beauty perceived by it, thoughts originated by it, 11, xix.-xx.

.. (5) Essence, Functions, and Mission of Art:—

Art, a vital and serious thing, no recreation, to be undertaken seriously or not at all, 4, 26, 16, 198; 19, 144, 210, 20, 45; not to excite passion or amuse indolence, 20, 26

Art concerned with production (Aristotle), the production of beautiful form or colour, 20, 46, not necessarily imitative or representative, 20, 46, but only fulfils its highest functions in stating a true thing or adorning a serviceable one, 20, 96, 23, 42; its object to support or exalt life, 20, 45

Pursuit of truth (visible things or moral feelings), its vital power, 20, 46, 97; its business to see, learn, and say, 16, 439, 440-2, 456, 460; to teach truth, 16, 143, or preach, 22, 422; to reveal God in creation, 16, 456; to recognise or know beautiful or noble things, and then give the best possible account of them, 22, 151; truth to nature, the basis of noble design, 8, 11, 9, 70, 253, 293, 409, 10, 156, 16, 251, 32, 127

Art as representation: the liker the better, the best art realises the most absolutely, 4, 290, 11, 241, 15, 354, 16, 270 seq., 19, 410-1, 20, 206, 282-4, 22, 367, represents everything seen or believed in, 5, 115, 8, 11, with absolute sincerity, 15, 359; the highest thing art can do, the true image of a noble human being, 20, 46, 98, 332 n., 22, 102; but art less beautiful than the realities, 22, 222, "the best in this kind are but shadows," 22, 152, 485

Art as selective, etc.: though less than the reality it is in another sense more, for it appeals to the mind not merely to the senses, 3, 135 seq., appeals to people who can understand, 20, 284-6, does not generalise but reveals the universal in the particular (see Generalisation); gives the artist's impressions, expresses his soul, 5, lv, 11, xvii, 203, gives the idea of a beautiful thing, not the realisation of an ugly one, 15, 352-3; interprets not imitates, 3, 12, 16, 269, is imaginative, not deceptive, 20, 61; points out the most beautiful, 5, 57; presents truth with visible operation of intellect, 16, 285; selects the worthiest truths, 3, 140 seq., suggests rather than informs, 1, 441

Imagination, invention, inspiration in art (see also those words): a greater thing than skill, 22, 313; the chief source of value in a., 17, 67 n., 364; the essential of a., 6, 27, 7, 209, 19, 180-1, 22, 502; imag. to be roused not sated by a., 11, 214; inspiration above all laws, 10, 117, 221, 22, 500; instinctive, 24, 203; unconscious, 20, 56; intuitive, 23, 477; involuntary, 18, 167; progress from sight to imag., 20, 223

Hence Great Art, the art of dreaming, 6, 437, 11, 180

The highest functions of art are (i.) to enforce the religion of men [see subdivision 7]; (ii.) to perfect their ethical state [subdivision 8]; (iii.) to do them material service [subdivision 12], 20, 46.

.. (6) Characteristics of Good and Great Art:—

"Of Greatness of Style," ch. iii. Mod. P. iii., 5, 42 seq.:—great a., that which represents the beautiful and good, 5, 42, 44; characterised by (i.) choice of noble subject, 5, 48-9, which must be (a) sincere, 5, 49-50, (b) wise, 5, 50, forms of error, superseding expression by technical excellence, 5, 53, technical excellence by expression, 5, 53-5; (ii.) love of beauty, 5, 55-8; (iii.) sincerity, 15, 359, inclusion of the largest possible quantity of truth in harmony, 5, 58-60, corollaries:—great

art generally distinct, 5, 60-1, generally large in masses, 5, 61-2; (iv.) invention; produced by the imagination, 5, 63-4; great art, the sum of all the powers of man, 5, 65-6

Four essentials, and the contrary states:—(i.) faultless and permanent workmanship, 22, 84, 85, 91, 23, 699; (ii.) serenity in state or action, giving permanence to images such as we should desire always to behold, 11, 241, 22, 84, 85, 86, 93, opposed to dramatic excitement, 19, 203, 22, 499, 24, 109; (iii.) face principal, not body, 22, 85, 86, 94; (iv.) face free from vice or pain, 22, 85, 86, 98, 101

Various characteristics:—best, is truest, simplest, usefulest, 18, 131-2; cannot be multiplied, is individual, 9, 456; cannot be produced by models or rules, 10, 207; combines grace and fitness, 24, 219; common nature in, 5, 32; completeness in itself, 3, 40; confesses man as both soul and body, 7, 264, 23, 18, 34, 628, but neither skull nor skeleton, 33, 315; delicate, 5, 62-3, 15, 12, 37, 155, 33, 346; depends on motive of the artist, 16, 291-2; didactic, 14, 265, 20, 300, 22, 315, 326, 432, 36, 563, in what sense, 19, 394, 395, in effect not in conception, 19, 307, "set upon a hill," 22, 327; essentials:—affection, devotion, patience, faith, 15, 485; every touch tells, nothing done in vain, 5, 63, 19, 139, 20, 78, 327; 22, 18, 220; freedom, 7, 229

Laws of Good and Great Art:—fineness of execution and purity of purpose co-ordinate, 19, 80; grasps and orders facts, 16, 287; heroism the true subject of, 18, 152, 448; is a gift, cannot be taught or acquired, 5, 68, 189; is executed so as to strike people, 20, 303; is for the people, 20, 298, 299; is forgotten in what it represents, 20, 300; is national, 33, 311; measured by truth, refinement, confusion, 12, 472; must be popular, 20, 298, 22, 21, 317; never contentious, 7, 229; not quaint or singular, 20, 33; obedience to law of order, 23, 699-700, 34, 172; occupies and calls out the whole soul in artist and spectator, 11, 203, 213; pleasing to all, 24, 128; produced by men of high feeling, 5, 32; smallest remains of, always lovely, 23, 307; submissive to law, 15, 344, 20, 322; subtlety of touch, 16, 419; teaches what is noble in past, lovely in existing life, 20, 300; temper of, quiet and gentle, 20, 304, 308; tender and true, 16, 281; test of, happiness of the workman in his work, 8, 218; to stay the fleeting not to systematise the fixed, 11, 62; work of men trained under true masters, 28, 699, 34, 172.

(7) Art in relation to Religion, Religious Art:—[(a) general ideas and principal passages, (b) various remarks]. This is one of the subjects on which a selection of detached passages seems to show contradictions; e.g., on the one hand, art never employed on a grand scale except in service of r., 18, 152, all progressive a. hitherto has been r. art, 14, 243, 24, 29, r. the life of art, 22, 508, the foundation of a., 18, 145, the moving spirit of all great a., 3, 670, arts never flourish unless primarily devoted to r., 8, 43, r. essential to a., 36, 543, but, on the other hand, r. vividdest when a. weakest, 19, 384-5, a. the exponent of r., 33, 208, as to the highest attainments of a., there has never been any question but that they were founded entirely on the beauty and love of this present world, etc., 9, 31, 20, 57 n. (cf. under Titian). An examination of the passages referred to below brings such seemingly contradictory statements into logical relation. It should, however, be noted that R.'s views on the relative art-power of "religious" and "irreligious" painters underwent development, 29, 87-91, 36, 339

(a) Relations of religion and art, general ideas and principal passages:—"Relation of Art to Religion," lect. ii. See on Art, 20, 45 seq. :—temper in which subject to be approached, 20, 51-3

(i.) how far art has been literally directed by spiritual powers, 20, 53-6

(ii.) if not inspired, how far exalted by them 20, 57, 57-9 n.

(iii.) how far has it advanced the creeds recommended by it, 20, 57, difficulty of the inquiry, 8 40 n., 10, 124, 36, 61—in (a) the realisation of imagined spiritual persons, 5, 72, 20, 57-66—by (a) making us believe what we should not else have believed, 20, 60, faultful influence herein, 20, 60 and n., but only if its forms supposed to be real, no imaginary, 5, 73, 20, 60-2, 230; by (b) making us think of subjects we should not else have thought of, 20, 60—in (b) the limitation of imagined spiritual presences to certain places, 10, 118, 122, 124, 20, 57, 66-71, 115. On the whole, a. never prospered unless devoted to proclaiming r., 18, 152, but failed in such proclamation, 18, 153

"False Ideal: Religious," ch. iv. Mod. P. vol. iii., 5, 70 seq. :—creation of false images, no danger of this in first stage of art, which is incapable of realization and frankly symbolic, 5 73, 10, 127, 20, 60

In second stage, "Angelic ideal," images true in feeling, false in fact, and impossible realizations lead to forgetfulness of true facts, 20, 73-7; symbols of drama taken for true drama, 19, 206

In third stage, philosophical or "Raphaelian ideal," r. employed for display of a., instead of a. for display of r., 5, 77, inverse ratio of technique and devotion, 3, 21, 5, 397; change all the more fatal because accompanied by greater dignity, 5, 77; "compositions" of impossible scenes: accepted as historical facts, 5, 79, and deadened faith in r., 5, 79-81

Hence r. divorced from a. :—(1) dulness of r. art, evangelicalism associated with bad art, 5 83-4, (2) sentimental r. art, 5, 84-5, 10, 125, "the monk's opera or theatre-going," 5, 84; misuse of a. in Bible pictures, 5, 88 n.; modern popular religious a., vulgar, 22, 371

True religious ideal very rarely attained, 5, 85; art useful to r. in (1) representing imaginary beings of another world, 4, 329-32, 5, 85-6; (2) Christ as a living presence, 5, 86; (3) reality of conception in religious scenes, 5, 86, 19, 205-6, 34,

Future possibilities for r. art both skilful and sincere, 5, 86-7; requirement of learning has spoiled r. art, 10, 128, 11, 70; effective r. art lies between barbarous idol-fashioning and magnificent craftsmanship, 10, 131

(b) various remarks:—a. not to formulate our convictions in r., 20, 52; birds and claws in, 25, 25; colourists and r., 10, 173; conditions necessary for faithful r. art, 24, 110; decline in r., and decadence of Italian painting, 34, 453; does the pursuit of, save souls? 1, 396; early a. and r., 20, 84, 23, 44; English genius unfit for, 20, 29; landscape of mountain distances, 6, 431; Lippi's "Madonna" wrought in real religion, 28, 574, 701; mediæval

 Lautilf, Beauty. [In this article, references are first given to the cardinal passages in which Ruskin's theory of beauty may be found—(1) in the form of aphorisms; (2) in various propositions, these references being so arranged as to trace his argument. (3) General references are then given, and these may be regarded as illustrations of the foregoing principles. (4) "Lamp of Beauty," in architecture]
 (1) Ruskin's theory of, aphorisms and definitions in which it is summed, 20, 209 ("what one noble spirit has created, seen and felt by another"), 15, 438 ("beauty is the power in anything of delighting an intelligent human soul by its appearance"), 7, 193 ("not a pleasure to be snatched, but a law to be learned"), 4, 4, 49-50 ("Happy are the pure in heart, for they shall see God")
 (2) various propositions which the theory involves, and in which it is stated or defended:— beauty and ugliness, positive qualities, 5, 45;
 universal canons of beauty ascertainable, 3, 33 n., 4, 62, 9, 62, but the pleasure thence derived is instinctive, rather than intellectual, 3, 109-11, 1, 450, 4, 87, 211, 25, 45, 15, 391, and involves perceptions of body as well as soul, 9, 445; there is "an eye for beauty like an ear for music," 3, 142, 4, 211; faculty by which beauty is apprehended (theoria), moral and sensual, 4, 42 seq., 48, 161, 210; false theories of beauty examined:
 —(a) the beautiful not identical with the true, 4, 66, 5, 55 n.; but the beautiful in art must conform to the true in nature, 4, 67, 3, 138, and truth and beauty always associated in great art, 3, 616; (b) the beautiful not the useful, 4, 67, 152-3; "the most beautiful things in the world are the most useless," 9, 72, 10, 102; (c) does not depend on custom, 4, 67-70, 5, 44-5, 12, 27; (d) does not result from association of ideas, 4, 70-5, 365-8, 1, 127, 449-51, 15, 422, 36, 58-9; beauty, the expression of the Creating Spirit, 29, 334; divisions of beauty, 4, 64—typical (external qualities of bodies typical of divine attributes), analysis of, 4, 76-145, 142 n.; "all beauty founded on laws of

7. Breathed . . . the breath of life, 16, 377, 23, 426, 28, 323

! It has been necessary, for brevity's sake, to shorten the quotation, often giving catch-words only. Where the words quoted occur more than once in Scripture, the reference is to the place where they first occur. In some cases, where the passage is merely descriptive of a work of art, such as the sculptures on the façade of Amiens Cathedral or the mosaics of St. Mark's (Vols. 24 and 33), the reference is omitted. The addition of V., G.T., or LXX after a reference signifies that in the passage in question R. gives the Vulgate; Greek Testament, or Septuagint version.

- <sup>1</sup> The varying use, which R. here notes, may be traced in the items of this Index, and explains apparent contradictions, as when the "classical age" is described as an age of faith (12, 139) and as wanting in faith (7, 316). In the former case, "classical" means "Greek and Roman," in the latter "the 'classical' ideal illustrated by Claude and Poussin." R. has yet a third use of the word (see above, "definition applied to books").
- <sup>2</sup> Where a reference to Aulus Gellius (Noctes Att., xix, 8, 15) might have been given: "classicus scriptor, non proletarius" (a metaphor going back to the division of the Roman people by Servius Tullius).

Colour. [The references in this article are divided into the following sections:—(1) general summaries and principal passages; (2) miscellaneous remarks, referring mainly to colour in the art of painting; (3) lessons in; (4) local colour; (5) the use of colour in other arts; (6) colour in natural objects]

    "    (1) general summaries and principal passages:—R.'s theory of colour is deducible from his general theory of beauty (q.v.). He holds that c. is absolute, not relative;<sup>1</sup> the c. of an object is not sensation, but the power of producing it, 5, 201-2, every c., or force of c., is fixed and measurable, 6, 50-1, whether copiable by art or not, 15, 134 n. The standards of c. are fixed by those in nature, 15, 417, being those in which men in states of mental and physical health delight, 25, 264, 414, 26, 179

    "    The chapters especially devoted to the subject of colour are:—M. P., i. pt. ii. sec. i. ch. v. ("Truths of Colour the least important"), 3, 158 seq.; i. pt. ii. sec. ii. ch. ii. ("Of Truth of Colour"), 3, 277 seq.; Addresses on Dec. Colour,

1 Although the passages quoted 6 (d) cover every reference, it has been thought well also to summarise the references under the headings of topics and persons, etc. This means some repetition, which must be excused by the added convenience. In regard to the passages quoted, R. gives them sometimes in the original and sometimes in translation, and the numbers of the lines accordingly varying as they are those of Dante or Cary and others. In the index the reference is always to the original, and the passage is so cited.

 .. In connexion with the title of Fors Clavigera, R. uses the word "Fors" as a personification in two sets of senses:—(1) The "First," "Second," and "Third Fors" as personifying Force (or Courage), Fortitude (or Patience), and Fortune, 27, 28, 29, 291 n., 518:—
 The "First Fors" (Courage), 27, 291
 The "Second Fors" (Patience), 28, 451, 499
 The "Third Fors" (Fortune or Chance), commonly referred to as "Fors" merely—as one of human words, deeds, and lots, 27, 468, 28, 458, 518, 643, 671, 28, 63 n., 197, 368 n., 29, 211; in the case of Scott, 27, 564, 620, 621, 28, 19, 4, 280 n.; in the case of R., 15, 484, 24, 266, 37, 1, 200, 315, 323, 447, 467, 489, 521, 543, 28, 84, 5, 245, 353, 435, 443, 448, 449, 457 n., 558 n., 3, 661, 29, 98, 101, 165, 166, 173, 181, 338, 342, 9, 34, 43; as ordering the contents of Fors Clavigera, 27, 81, 82, 270, 315, 323, 328, 360, 382, 395, 3, 489, 522, 543, 553, 643, 662, 28, 38 n., 62, 63, 91, 162 n., 169, 235, 254, 262, 288, 335, 384, 5, 704 n., 761, 29, 119, 146, 162, 166, 200, 274, 5, 294, 338, and appointing its errors, 27, 603, 634
 (2) Taking "the third Fors" as Fortune, R. divides its orderings in correspondence with the Three Fates of the Greeks, 7, 394—Clotho (the first Fors, in this scheme), Lachesis (the Second), and Atropos (the Third), 28, 443, 486. But two sets of ideas sometimes mingle, see 27, 291, and passages there cited.

Giotto. [This article is divided under the following heads:—(1) principal passages and development of R.'s views; (2) general estimate of G. and his position in the history of art; (3) life and anecdotes;

(4) detailed criticisms and remarks, often supplying additional references on points covered under (2);

(5) particular subjects and objects as painted by G.; (6) references to particular works; (7) various references.]

„ (1) principal passages, etc.:—The principal passages on G. are (in order of date) the Review of Lord

Lindsay (1847), 12, 213-20, general account of G.'s
"artistical orbit," 12, 221-3; Giotto (1853-60), 24,

1-111; Mornings in Florence (1875-77), 23, 295 seq.

It should be noticed in using the detailed references that R.'s views on G. underwent some development (see 23, xxxviii., 24, xlv.); at first G. had seemed to him weaker than the great worldly painters, 29, 89, but later studies led him to account the weaknesses as due only to absence of material science, and to rank G. as "essentially stronger and greater than Titian," 29, 91. The altered point of view was a development, rather than a change, as an intermediate passage, distinguishing between material science and spiritual insight, will show, 11, 205 ("This is our brother"). R. came further to account G. as "conclusive" on the relations between line and colour, 13, 525, 15, 345.

It should be noted further that when R. wrote on G. at Padua (1854), he had not seen G.'s work at Assisi nor closely studied him at Florence, 16, 75 n., 24, 35

„ (2) general estimate of, and his position in the history of art:—G. introduced gradual innovations on Byzantine models, 3, 21, 24, 24 seq., standing midway between servitude and licence (Byzantines and Naturalists), 24, 31, 88, making progress from formalism to naturalism, 24, 149;

These innovations being (1) greater brightness of colour, 24, 25-6, (2) greater breadth of mass, 24,

26, (3) closer imitation of nature, 24, 26-7, determination to see things as they are, and the least with the greatest, 23, 321, exalting domestic life and human nature, 23, 332-3

The greatest painter of his age, 5, 37, and one of the greatest men that ever lived, 24, 28, the founder of the school of Christian art, 15, 345, 24, 21, the head of the spiritual school, 34, 628

In technique, (1) his works were never highly finished, 24, 35, (2) he was a noble colourist, 24, 36,

(3) his works were decorative, intentionally subject to architectural effect, 24, 37, (4) they are independent of all inferior sources of pictorial interest, 12, 221-2, 24, 40, (5) he is a master of expression, 12, 222, though his drawing is often faulty, 24, 38-9

But his works have the value belonging to freshness of idea, 24, 27-8, and moral power and historic interest, 24, 28. His were "the burning messages of prophecy delivered by stammering lips," 3, 90, and he has been supposed a "mere infant in his profession," 12, 135. But he was strong in weakness, coming into the world with exactly the right gifts at the right time, 12, 222-3, and in circumstances peculiarly favourable to his genius, 24, 32

Universality of his gifts, 12, 8, 23, 300, designer as well as painter and sculptor, 16, 288, painter, sculptor, and architect, 23, 296, sculptor and painter, 22, 337, 24, 455 n., sculptor and architect, 12, 85, 16, 361

(3) life and anecdotes.—R. never closely studied materials for, 24, 11 (and his dates, etc., in Giotto are doubtful, 24, xlv.-vi.)

birth, date uncertain (1266 or 1276), 24, 16-17, at Pespignano, 24, 17, near Florence, 23, 295; mountain bred, 6, 434, scenery of his home, 24, 17-18; name, 22, 341, dates, 22, 333

found as a shepherd lad drawing or scratching a sheep on a stone, 23, 267, 423, 474, 24, 18; by Cimabue, 12, 213, 16, 118, 450, 24, 18; leaves his sheepfold, 8, 189 ("I took thee from the sheep-cote"), 24, 18, 27, 211, and becomes C.'s pupil, Vasari's tale of his imitation of a fly, 5, 36 n., 12, 213; eclipsing his master ("ora ha Giotto il grido"), 19, 28, 23, 333 (see also Cimabue)

(4) detailed criticisms and remarks: (a) paintings, (b) architecture, (c) sculpture: (a) principally on his paintings:—advance on Margheritone, 13, 241; appeals only to a religious public, 3, 648; his art subjected to his visions, 29, 459; Arundel Society and, 4, xlv., 34, 637, 37, 92, see also below, under 6 (Padua); attitude of prayer and thanksgiving distinguished, 23, 315; balanced powers of, 5, 52; best represented by bold woodcuts, 24, 36; better seen in Florence than Assisi or Padua, 23, 295; certainty of hand, 15, 370; Chaucer and, 23, 340; chiaroscuro sacrificed to colour, 24, 37-8, system of, 12, 221; Cimabue and, relative rank, 23, xlv., xlv., 23, 199-200, 37, 112, 114, 128

Gothic Architecture, origin of the term, 10, 184-5, n. [The following article is divided under several heads, thus:—(1) main analysis, (2) general characteristics and qualities, (3) details, (4) rise, development, and fall, (5) various schools, (6) various remarks, (7) The Gothic Revival and modern Gothic.]

(1) main analysis of:—general character easy to understand, 12, 20, but difficult to define, 10, 180 n., single characteristic constituting gothicness, 10, 2 and n., but the union of several in various measures, 10, 183-4, 245, various elements appearing in different measure in different kinds of G., 1, 245 n., and the best not necessarily being the best G., 10, 242. These elements relate to (a) material expression, (b) material form, 10, 181-3;—(i) mental expression: G. characteristics are:—(i.) Savageness, or Rudeness, 5, 168, 10, 184-4, 11, 15, 74; an index of climate and national character, 10, 185-8; and of religious principle, recognising the claims of the individual soul, content to subordinate executive perfection to the life and liberty of the workman (see further below), 9, 291, 10, 96, 129, 188-200, 11, 190 n.; rules resulting from this principle, 10, 196-204

(ii.) Changefulness or Variety, 8, 200, 10, 204-4, 12, 96-7; capable of perpetual novelty, 10, 58; systematised schools no place in, 9, 199 n. (iii.) Naturalism, or love of natural objects for their own sake, 10, 215-39, 11, 361, 12, 64 seq., 3 seq.; uniting fact with design, 10, 231-4; representing imaginative truth realistically, not symbolically, 10, 232; avoiding false idealism and purism, 10, 234-5; showing fondness for forms of natural vegetation, 1, 136 n., 10, 235-9, 56, 12, 31, 63

(iv.) Grotesque, or fantastic imagination, 1, 54-5, 5, 138-9, 9, 432 n., 433-4, 10, 177, 239, 1, 136, 145, 151 seq.

(v.) Rigidity, active as well as stable, expressing energy, 9, 186, 10, 239-43; manifesting self, inter alia, in use of crabbéd, thorny, per-se, rather than luxuriant, forms, 10, 241; contrast in this respect between N. and S. Gothic, 1, 122, 10, 256-7; morbid exaggeration in N. G., 5, 463-4

(vi.) Redundance, or uncalculating bestowal of labour, 10, 243-5; effect often depending upon accumulation of ornament, 10, 243, 244

(material form, 10, liii., 245-69; final definition of G. under this head, 10, 260; and the G. characteristics being:—

(i.) use of the pointed arch in the roof proper, 0, 247, 12, 20, 35

(ii.) use of the gable for roof-mask, 10, 247-9, "architecture of the gable," 10, 252-3, 12, 34-6; his, the strongest form of building, 10, 312, 12, 3-4, the noblest form of construction, 12, 82-3; and the most in accord with natural forms, 12, 5-30, being the application to the arch of the system of foliage, 10, 256; divisions of G., in this respect:—Western, or Pure, 10, 253, Eastern, or Arabian, 10, 253; relations of, in construction, to other architectures, 10, 253-5

(iii.) use of foliage, in form of arch or in traceries or in both, 10, 255-60; constructive value of the cusp, 9, xli., 167, 12, 82 n.; divisions

Government [(1) general, (2) forms and principles of, (3) functions of]

.. (1) general:—a law of life, 7, 207, 17, 75, 18, 359; balance of Semitic and Iapetic powers in, 28, 738 n.; happiness of nations depends on g., not liberty, 19, 448; history of a, not always that of a nation, 17, 245; infinite complexity of questions of, 29, 578; nationality not coincident with, 33, 93-4; need of, nowadays, 18, 500, 37, 147; principles of, in Prussia (Carlyle's Friedrich), 37, 15; simile of nation and shipwrecked crew, 17, 373; strength of, on what dependent (not mere diffusion or annexation), 18, 479-80; the true idea of, 18, 477-8; to be honoured must be honourable, 27, 368

.. (2) forms and principles of, "G." title of ch. v. in Munera, 17, 231:—g. of a State consists of four elements, each with its "enforcements," 17, 231 n.:

(i.) Customs, the nation's self-government, 17, xcii., 231-6

(ii.) Laws, the definitions and bond of customs, 17, 236, of three kinds:—(a) Archic, determining what is, and is not, to be done, 17, xciii., 237-9; (b) Meristic, what is, and is not, to be possessed, 17, xciii., 237, 239-41; (c) Critic, what is, and is not, to be suffered, 17, xciii., 237, 241-4

Government (continued)

(iii.) Council, 17, 236 n., the determination of national conduct and the making of laws, 17, 244, of two kinds:—(a) Invisible (public opinion, etc.), 17, 244, and (b) Visible: "the toys of some nations, diseases of others," etc., 17, 245

(iv.) The Executive, the national "hand," 12, 551

Forms of G. distinguished according to the nature of the Council, essentially two (12, 551) or three (17, 245) and no more:—

(i.) Democracy, when the Council is representative only of the people, the national "tongue," 12, 551, 552, when the authority is vested in a majority, 17, 245

(ii.) Monarchy, when the Council is chosen to decide for the people, the national "head," 12, 551-2, in this sense all right g. being monarchic, 12, 552, when the authority is vested in one person, 17, 245

(iii.) Oligarchy, when the authority is vested in a minority, 17, 245

Confusion of terms owing to confusing form and nature of g., 12, 552; there may be democratic monarchies and monarchic democracies, 12, 552, "republics" not necessarily democratic, 17, 246; R.'s views on the functions of g. not to be confounded with forms of g., 36, 591-2

Forms of g. in themselves immaterial ("whatever is best administered," etc.), 17, 248, 446, 20, 379, 27, 14, 378, 28, 651; to say that a G. is a Republic, or a Monarchy, does not tell us whether it is just or not, 27, 16; Auberger Herbert on Republics as the best form of g., 27, 234; question not yet determinable, 27, 17; g. the expression, rather than the cause, of national character, 9, 18 n., 21, 14, 477, and cannot be created by a word, 27, 16; nations have the g. they are capable of, 27, 235, worthless nations being capable of none, 22, 364, 27, 235

The vital necessity is that the wise and kind, few or many, should g. the unwise and unkind, 17, 248, 27, 120, all g. bad unless meant to be obeyed, 28, 651, analogies from animal kingdom, 17, 249-50, with logs for kings, choice of wood immaterial, 28, 651

Ideals of g., in Lorenzetti's fresco (Siena), 16, 54 (Pl. 1), Xenophon's Economist, 31, 27-8. See also Democracy, Monarchy, Republic, Tyranny

(3) functions of g., 17, 231, 289; 1—g. should be paternal, 12, 554, 16, 25, 27 n., 105-9, in what sense, 16, 105-6, and within what limits, 16, 109; "interference" generally advocated or reprobated in accordance with private interests, 17, 289; its authority being more than is yet dreamed of, 11, 263, 17, 377; its primary functions being (1) to see that the people have food, fuel, clothes, 11, 263, 17, 377, 28, 651, 652, (2) to educate, 16, 111-2, 17, 21, 18, 502, 28, 651, 652; detailed functions:—a summary of, 37, 494; all g. now costly, 17, 251, true g. set to true work would yield an income dividend, 17, 253; as defined by the American "Bread-winners' League," 29, 218; economic functions of, 16, 21 seq.; in art-education, 16, 484 (see also Artists, Design, Museums); in religious matters, 12, 553 seq.; not to take all and do nothing, 18, 496; seven aspects of, 17,

Greek Art (generally; for Architecture, see next article). [This article is divided under the following heads:—(1) Senses in which R. uses the terms, classical, Byzantine, etc.; (2) essential character of; (3) various characteristics; (4) miscellaneous remarks.]

“(1) senses in which R. speaks of it; principally, the art of Ancient Greece, illustrated by reference mainly to Architecture, Coins, Sculpture, and Vases, coins being given special prominence as best lending themselves to reproduction, 20, 194; but the term “Greek School” or “Greek Art” is also used, with reference to questions of delineation, of the entire range of schools, from Vases to Turner, which concern themselves mainly with the representation of light and its effects on material form, 20, 153, as opposed to the Gothic (q.v.) school of colour, 22, 39. These two senses should be remembered in using the following references. They cannot always be distinguished, for, though in an early book he distinguishes Greek and Byzantine sharply, 8, 119-21, R. afterwards corrected the passage, Byzantine being “Greek, with Christ for Zeus,” 8, 121 n., 10, 11, insisting that there is “but one Greek School,” 24, 281, the remnant from the classical decadence reviving at Byzantium and in Italy, 23, 200, 29, 129-30, uniting with Christian in the Renaissance, 19, 435 (e.g. in Botticelli, q.v.), and the example which he placed in his Oxford School as best exhibiting the union of several characteristics of G. art is inherited G. work at Pisa in the 12th cent., 21, 147-8 (Pl. 37). Of derived G. work, reference is made to Madonna at Murano, 10, 62, thronos on St. Mark's, 24, 243, tomb at Palermo, 33, 476-7, various examples at Venice, 14, 427, 10, 305, 24, 414-5, 29, 130

“(2) essential character:—the origin of all art, 20, 351, and determined the methods of art for all time, 31, 17; its essential characteristic not, as commonly supposed, ideal beauty, 19, 412, 20, 302, 341-2, 24, 281—faces not specially beautiful, 19, 412-3, 20, 342, 22, 394, 34, 152, and G. art is even faceless, 22, 46, so-called “ideals” were of noble form actually seen, 5, 114, 12, 151-2—but rightness, reality, veracity, 18, 446 n., 19, 388, 414, 20, 302, 347, 351, 405, 22, 403, 23, 33—attracting a rational object and simple aims by simple means, 19, 414, 20, 280, 302, and being the root of all simplicity in art, 20, 347-9, giving the grace of rest, not of action, 20, 339 21, 147, humanising the monstrous, 19, 319 n., 20, 228, 333, 348-9 (Pl. 22), 405, 409, 410, 21, 147, 33, 308, limiting and making real the indefinite, 20, 228, 405, 409, 410, reducing mystic symbols to clear shapes, 20, 412, substituting order for phantasy and licence, 19, 414, 21, 147, verifying the inaccurate, 20, 228, 347, 405, 409, 410, 22, 51; this essential character in harmony with the leading conception of G. religion, 18, 446; its essence

 Grotesque, The, in art and literature [(1) general analysis, (2) noble and ignoble distinguished, (3) general remarks]
 .. (1) general analysis:—essence of the grotesque, difficult of analysis, 9, 434; is either ludicrous or fearful, though the two elements are generally combined, 11, 151:—(i.) ludicrous, healthful irrational play of the imagination in times of 5, 130, 131-2, 11, 151-6; men being divided (a) those who play wisely, 11, 152-3, 156; (b) those who play necessarily, 11, 153-4, 157-8, giving scope to art to much "art of the wayside," the grotesque of the ordinary workman in Gothic architecture, etc., 11, 158-60; (c) who play inordinately, 154-5, 160, creating the more cultivated grotesque of arabesques, etc., a luscious form of nonsense, 11, 161-2; (d) who do not play at all, 11, 155, 156
 .. (ii.) fearful, the irregular and accidental contemplation of the terrible, 5, 120, 11, 16, connected with sensualist ideals, 5, 103, subdivided according as the temper of contemplation is that of:—(a) predetermined or involun-

R.'s writings on, collected in 30, with descriptive Introduction (cf. Intro. to 27, lvii.-lx.), dealing with the following topics:—double aspect, Utopian and actual, xxi.-iv., main scheme practical, xxiv., R.'s hope that practical men would rally to it, xxiv., constitution of the actual Guild, xxiv.- xxv., hindrances to its development, xxv.-vi., account of its properties, xxvi.-viii., of the Barmouth cottages, xxviii.-xxxi., history of the Guild as told in the Reports, etc., xxxi.-iv., agricultural experiments, xxxiv.-vi., industrial enterprises, xxxvi.-vii., Educational work, xxxvii.-xli.

R. in speaking of the Guild sometimes refers to the actual work of the established G., and sometimes to an imaginary Ideal Commonwealth, 27, lvii., 30, xxi., a mixture which alienated adherents, 29, 317, and obscured his plans, 30, 15; he was, however, concerned more with principles than plans, 27, 323; the distinction, 29, 316, 30, 95, is observed as far as possible in this article, which is therefore divided into (I.) The Actual Guild, (II.) Ideal Community. "As far as possible":
some of the points cannot clearly be disentangled;
also R. contemplated the possibility of the principles of his scheme passing into practice under other forms than he designed, and thus becoming a "vast Policy," 28, 436-7

Labour (see also Work). [(1) The Law of Labour, (2) Economic Definitions, (3) Remuneration of Labour, (4) R.'s fundamental doctrine of intrinsic value of Labour, (5) Direction of Labour, (6) Organisation of Labour, (7) Division of Labour, (8) Who is to do the rough work? (9) Importance of manual labour. These nine subdivisions are arranged in logical order, to illustrate R.'s views on the subject. (10) Lastly, miscellaneous references are given alphabetically.]

„ (1) The Law of Labour:—l. a law of human life, "In the sweat of thy face thou shalt eat bread," etc., 16, 396, 17, 95 n., 18, 418, 28, 332, 33, 275; man born to l., sorrow, and joy, and all three connected, 17, 336, life without industry is guilt, 20, 93; only God creates without toil, 9, 454; l. a source of happiness, 1, 126-7; the "beauty of holiness" in both l. and rest, 23, 256, but more in l. than in rest, 20, 94; one of the three talismans of national existence, 16, 408

Therefore, economically, Labour is the only source of produce, 16, 396; men live by labour, not trade, 29, 409; l. is the root of profit, 17, 91, 29, 225 n., the claim to property ("he that will not work, neither shall he eat"), 16, 130, 28, 651, St. George's Vow, 28, 419, and a man has a right to what he thus independently earns, 17, 192-3, 374-5; no man can become largely rich by, 17, 264, 564

„ (2) Economic definitions:—Labour, the contest of the life of man with an opposite, the quantity of loss or failure of life caused by any effort, 17, 94-5, 182-3 (derivation, "lapse," 17, 183; distinguished from effort itself, 17, 183, 184)

Cost, the quantity of l. required to produce a thing, 17, 153, 183; price, quantity of l. which possessor of a thing will take in exchange for it, 17, 153; money, the promise to give a certified quantity of l. on demand, 17, 50, 158, 487

Therefore, price of other things must be counted by quantity of l., not price of l. by quantity of other things, idea that l. is a commodity to be bought and sold, the alpha and omega of politico-economic fallacy, 17, 95, 183, 187-8, 473; "cheapness of labour" a misnomer for "dearness of things," 17, 96; value of l. is distinct from cost and price, e.g. sprat and deer, 17, 82, sapling in rocky or soft ground, 17, 95

„ (3) Remuneration of Labour (see also Wages):—the value of any piece of l. is dependent not on supply and demand, 17, 68-9, 137, 263, 319, 499, 27, 192, 523 seq., but is fixed and ascertainable (being the quantity of food and air enabling a man to perform it without loss), 17, 68, 473, just payment for l. is l. of equivalent value, 64-6, modified by the fact that the order of given in payment is general, while the l. received is special, 17, 66-7; injustice of "supply and demand" payment, 17, 68-70, l. should be paid at fixed rates, 17, 34, 74, 319; land, l., capital, and their remuneration (Fawcett), 188-9

„ (4) R.'s fundamental doctrine about Labour follows from that about Wealth (q.v.). As intrinsic v. is the essential element in w., so, in regard to cost of goods (i.e. the labour required to produce them, 17, 153), the question to be asked is intrinsic nature of the l., (i.) in relation to worker, (ii.) in relation to the thing produced.

(i.) in relation to the worker:—its due distribution over a man's lifetime, 17, 275-6, 27, 5 according as a given duration of l. is more or destructive of life, 17, 184 n., 234 n.; unproductive demoralizing, productive educational, 27, mechanical, degrading, though better than no 6, 18-19

(ii.) in relation to the thing produced:—intrinsic value not caused by l., which may produce a small quantity, 17, 133-4; wages matter little in proportion to the thing the worker is compelled to produce, 18, 390-1; l. may be constructive (agriculture), nugatory (jewel-cutting), or destructive (war), 17, 96; prosperity of a nation is in proportion to the quantity of l. spent in obtaining and enjoying means of life, 17, 98; question a nation is not how much l. it employs, but how much life it produces, 17, 104

"Labour limited by capital," dictum contested, 17, 176-7, 27, 39, instances of l. supported by capital and unproductive, and l. unsupported by capital and productive, 27, 38-9

Productive l., Mill's definition criticised, 64-6, 23, 734, 29, 101

„ (5) Direction of Labour:—it follows from (4) the direction of production is of supreme importance, 16, 48 seq., l. being good or bad, high or low according to the elements of life included in it, 17, 95:—abuse of l. fatal to art, 20, 107; amount spent on unproductive l., the ultimate cause of dearth, 27, 534; power of money over, 17, 20 right economy of labour: assigning to each man his right share, 7, 427-9, uniting refinement with humble toil, 7, 427, 429; waste of l. in various kinds of useless art, 10, 196-8, 16, 38, 17, 96, dress, 16, 49-50; waste of l., the worst death, 1, 426-7, 28, 177

Fallacy that demand for commodities is not demand for labour, 17, 78 n., 102-4, 27, 31-4

Fallacy that "luxury is good for trade," 1, 48 seq., 17, 553 seq., muscular human l., folly wasting, 7, 428, 17, 534, 543

(It follows from the preceding that in R.'s view the due organisation of labour is the supreme end of the time, 17, 18, 28, 651-3, 29, 600, 34, 36, 317-8, though new systems not to be hastily established, 28, 643; to be undertaken by the State, 16, 110-4, hand in hand with the Law, 16, 113-4, sphere for, in public works, 1, 23, 17, 545-6; organisation, training, and other reward for the l. that feeds, as well as the l. that kills, 18, 419, 507, under Captains of industry, 18, 424; all economy, domestic or national, the art of managing labour, 16, 18-19; constant, not intermittent, needed, 16, 21-2; first condition of education, to put men to wholesome useful work, 18, 507-8, 27, 39; giving work the best charity, 17, 540; l. as discipline, as reformatory and not merely reformatory, 17, 541, 519, 406; organisation made easy by honesty, 1, 20-1; sufficiency of a man's labour for all his days, and of a nation's for its, 16, 18-19

(Division of Labour, 28, 651:—between mind and hand, 22, 348, 27, 403, should be combined, 1, 201; collation better than division, 28, 373; far right, 28, 645; principles of, illustrated, 1, 187-8; stunts men's faculties, 10, 196, e.g. in arts, 10, 199 seq.; trenchant division into workers and thinkers fundamentally wrong, 10, 2; twenty-one essential divisions, 29, 409; unies exchange, does not arise from it, 28, 160

(Who is to do the rough work? for the rough work is more life-consuming than gentle work, and it is cant to pretend otherwise, 18, 4-8; amount of mechanical toil to be reduced (1) restriction of senseless luxuries, 7, 427, 17, 423-4; (2) restriction of servile ornament in arts, 24, 406; (3) manual labour undertaken voluntarily by upper classes, see next sub-heading; (restriction of machinery (g.v.) and encouragement of hand-labour, 18, 508 seq.; lowest kinds of labour, by criminals and the more servile classes, 17, 234, 236

(Importance of Manual Labour:—agricultural (diets of the ploughshare), 16, 113, 17, 23, 18, 2; a divine service, 20, 377, Roman honour for, 2, 357; Benedictine gospel of, 33, 237, 239; disapproval of, how caused by modern education, 29, 2; dignity and peace of, 7, 344, 29, 473, examples in Christ's Folk, 32, xxix.; educational value (20, xlv n., 27, lxx., 28, 517, as a substitute for athletics, 20, xxxix., xlv.-v., 29, 249 (see also Sport); every one to learn some, 20, 264, and some daily, ib.; personal and direct, called l., 28, 491, a condition in St. George's Co., 28, 4, and in Society of Monte Rosa, 27, 296; R.'s cultivation of, at Broadlands, 36, c.; soothing effect of, 28, 207; to be recognised as "gentle-ly," 10, 201, 19, 157; universal in healthy society (Marmontel), 27, 302-3; upper classes to undertake manual l. for health and harmonious development, 7, 428-9, 17, 235, 272, 34, 498

Land Tenure. [(1) Economic first principles, (2) Consequent principles of land tenure, (3) Conditions of tenure, (4) Signs of change, (5) Practical counsels. These subdivisions are, will be seen, arranged in logical sequence. (6) The last subdivision consists of miscellaneous references, arranged alphabetically.]

Economic first principles.—land is one of the natural forms of wealth (with associated air, water, etc.), 17, 154, 29, 14:—(i.) as producing intellectual and mechanical power, 17, 155 and n., 438; (ii.) as an object of sight and thought, producing intellectual power, 17, 155, land as a school of rural history, 22, 244, 29, 495, importance of flora and fauna, 17, 155, 27, 121, desert land to be made green, 28, 140, mountains and moorlands not to be cultivated, 17, 545, much should be made to rent but its loveliness, 17, 439. (This it might also be illustrated by many references enforcing the importance of national scenery as an element of natural wealth, of pure air and open fields versus coal-fields, e.g. 18, 486, 28, 67; see, further, England, Scenery.) Land is strictly limited in quantity, 29, 14; for this reason because it is necessary to national sustenance, it should not be monopolised by a favoured few, 17, 438, 18, 105-6

Consequent principles of Land Tenure.—State should secure it in various portions to those who deserve to be trusted with it, 17, 438, 444 n., 28, 67, enforcing due conditions of possession (e.g. prevention of waste, pollution, etc.), 17, 239; session to be limited by use, 17, 438, 29, 404, "the land to those who can use it," 27, 191.

Private property in, essential, 27, 191, 470; hereditary tenure, all healthy States founded on, 27, 404, 494. "The l. shall not be sold for ever, for the l. is Mine," 28, 767, 37, 389, shield-legend of George's Guild, 28, 672 n., 31, xlii. (Frontisp.)

Actual conditions of tenure.—of the present holders, some have bought it, some won it by acquisition, most seized originally by force, 27, 30 (held by force, laws only regulating its conditions, 28, 152, 29, 16), as admitted by Fawcett, 141, 27, 188-9, 379, Mill's equivocal views on the subject, 17, 442-5, ethics of reactionary theft treated by the economists, 17, 141. The present holders are largely mere rent-receivers, inhering the produce of others and spending on luxury, 17, 564-5, 27, 176:—able-bodied workers, 28, 157, absorbing the fruit of labour, 29, 16, conduits through which national wealth is stored, 17, 565, grinders, not of corn, but of flesh, for rent, 28, 492, Judases with the (game)-keepers, 28, 154, land-taxers and labour-taxers, 29, 16, mere tax-gatherers, 28, 737, pillaging the owners, 29, 294-5, treating God's land as theirs, 17, 153-4, worst modern form of Centaur, half worker, half gambler, 29, 391

Signs of change, 30, 153. The poor will not endure this injustice, 17, 565, 27, 176; imminence of the question, 29, 397; hue and cry against landlords, 28, 151; "magna-and-maxima

Chartist Ecclesia at Westminster" coming, resolved on division of land, 27, lii., 28, 153, 29, 273; Republican movement against, 28, 152, 153; revolution, how to be averted? 29, 272; legal forms alone will not secure possession, 28, 152, 29, 16; landlords may keep if they can, 23, 152, 714 and n., can they fight for their lands? 28, 152, 157; their duty or doom, 18, 512-3

(5) Practical Counsels.—"Nationalization," nonsense, 29, 494; redistribution would have no better right than the original possession, 27, 30, 379, 29, 411, would cause civil disturbance, 17, 436, would in itself be of little advantage, 17, 434, 445 n., 18, 106, 29, 404, 411, but will come unless existing evils be remedied, 17, 436. What, then, is to be done? Existing holders not to be dispossessed, 27, 379-80, 28, 168 (see further under Squires); but the principles stated under (2) above to be recognised:—(i.) by the landlords, in recognising that possession of l. implies the duty of living on it, not taxing it, and making the best of it, 29, 19, 404, 494-5, 30, 93, 94, 153, 37, 389, in Fixed Rents, living on a certain fixed income and spending the rest on the estate, 28, 155-6. In ideal State, they would be paid fixed wages for superintendence, 17, 439, 565, 18, 108, 27, 368. (ii.) By Trade Unions, Co-operative Societies, and other Corporate Bodies buying land and making the most of it, 28, 768, 29, 411, 494; this the main direct purpose of St. George's Guild, 29, 169, 272, 30, 39; individuals should do the same, 28, 140. Simplification of transfer necessary, 28, 579, 29, 118, and public registration, 29, 495

Landscape, L.-Painting. [R. uses "Landscape" in two senses, landscape-painting and scenery. References to the former are here collected; those to the latter, under Scenery. The division is not quite trenchant, because R., in illustrating his remarks on landscape art and scenery, refers indifferently to both poetry and painting, 5, 221; the two articles should, therefore, be read together. The references here collected are subdivided thus:—(1) Historical survey; (2) Mediæval landscape; (3) The Old Masters generally; (4) Modern landscape, especially English; (5) Various Schools; (6) Definitions; (7) Principles of l.-painting; (8) Subjects and scope of; (9) Ruskin and the study of; (10) Miscellaneous references.]

(1) Historical survey. [R. gives such a survey in four principal places, using various terms for purposes of classification—L. A. P., 12, 109-28; Mod. P. i., 3, 165-258; Mod. P. iii., 5, 192-387; Mod. P. v., 7, 253-end. The references are here combined.] In ancient times there is hardly any landscape in art, 5, 193; Greek, Egyptian, Ninevite, Roman, it is purely symbolic and subordinate, 5, 248, 7, 256, 265, 12, 109-10. Later, five periods may be distinguished:—

(i.) "Giottesque," 12, 115, 123, advance made by Giotto and Orcagna, 12, 110-2

(ii.) "Leonardesque" (Perugino, Raphael, Leonardo), 12, 112-3, 115, 123, type of, 12, lxxxvii., 112 (Pl. 12), 5, 306-7 (Pl. 10, "Rock-drawing in the Middle Ages")

Belonging partly to (i.) but mainly to (ii.) is what R. calls "Purist Landscape," the formal l. of the early Italian painters, 3, 174-8, 4, 320-3, 5, 393; its defects, 5, 394-5 (Pl. 11, "Latest Purism"); Ghirlandajo's rocks compared with Turner's, 5, 395-6 (Pl. 12 and Fig. 5); its unreality, 7, 265. This "Purist Landscape" is much the same as what is elsewhere called "the Gothic School of l." (as contrasted with Chiaroscuro School), 20, 175-6, 22, 56, 63-4, 65-6; the few perfect examples of it, 22, 57

Masaccio was the first Naturalist innovator, 3, 179-80, 4, 323 n., 5, 396-7 (Pl. 13, "First Mountain Naturalism"), 12, 113; but he died early, and the next main stage is:—

(iii.) "Titianesque," 12, 113-5, 123; Venetian landscape, 3, 170-2, 180-3, 4, 323 n., 5, 398-9 (Pls. 16, 17, "Early" and "Advanced Naturalism"); the school of "Heroic" landscape, 7, 254, 264, 286

(iv.) The movement towards naturalism continues, but is perverted, 12, 116, 348-9, in Seventeenth Century Landscape, 3, 168-9, 184-8, 400 seq.; in the schools of:—

"Classical Landscape," perverted from Greek ideas of landscape, 5, 244; the school of Claude and Poussin, 7, 254, 264, 315 seq., 116-20; recipes for—"A L. with Figure," 34, 153-4

"Pastoral Landscape,"<sup>1</sup> the school of Cuyp, 3, 188, 5, 407, 7, 254, 264, 332 seq.

"Hybrid Landscape," the school of B. hem and Wouvermans, 7, 255, 363 seq.

The romanticist revival in literature follows, 120-2, and partly influenced by it (especially Byron and Scott, 33, 378) is:—

(v.) The "Turneresque" landscape, 12, 12, 365 seq.; Turner the first type of perfect landscape artist, 9, 435, 12, 127, and the only guide, 22, 25-6, 31; the "Contemplative School," 254, 264 (of which "Picturesque L." is a degradation, 7, 255); elsewhere called the "Chiaroscuro School," 22, 39

Schools and stages in, illustrated from representations of the aspen, 6, 97-102 (Pls. 27, 28)

(2) Mediæval landscape (in MSS., early picture etc.):—in early MSS., golden or chequered backgrounds, 5, 262 (Pl. 7, fig. 1), then blue sky introduced, 5, 262, 263; in 15th cent., trim garden, 5, 260, Macaulay's ridicule of them, 5, 260 leaf-form, 12, 110, 112, formation of the leaf-basis of all lovely design, 5, 264-6 (Pl. 8), lay the ivy-leaf, principle of all lovely composition, 5, 266-8 (Pl. 9); best in Grimani missal (MSS.), 22, 18, 57; general characteristics symmetry, 4, 120, 320, 5, 257, 6, 98-9, symbolism, 5, 269, conventionalism, 6, 99, definiteness, 5, 269, 6, 99, clear distances, 6, 103, severe formal and subordinate to figure-subjects, 5, 261, 392, 24, 167-8; recipe for a mediæval l., 12, 1 rock-drawing, 5, 306 (Pl. 10), 6, 365; skies and clouds, 5, 262, 312

(3) Landscape of the Old Masters generally:—aim mainly at deceptive resemblance and gave strict truths as lend themselves to it, 3, 165-8, modern painters seek to convey impressions of nature more truth in works of two or three of them than in all the O. M. put together, 3, 168; blue patchwork of, 3, 283; Claude, fatal effect, 3, 5 clouds: generalized, 3, 378-9, opaque, 3, 5 rain-cloud never given, 3, 396; foregrounds sacred painters, never give near water or rock, 4, 267; false idealism of, 3, 24-5 (e.g. Claud Mill, 3, 41); leafage, 3, 588; monotonous petition, 3, 167; mountain drawing, 3, 435, 46 skies, none fleecy, 3, 362, no gradations, 3, 46 tone of, unequalled, 3, 166, 259; trees, errors, 3, 580-1

(4) Modern Landscape:—different senses in which R. uses the term "modern," 11, xviii.; originated largely to fill up void left by decayed architecture, 10, xlvi., 207, 207-8 n., 11, 22 characteristics of, as contrasted with mediæval cloudiness, 5, 317-9, 6, 73 seq., love of liber 5, 319-20, love of mountains, 5, 320, profanity temper, 5, 320, sombre colour, 5, 220-x, 1. principal, not subordinate, 24, 168-9; outline a

(Definitions :—landscape painting shows relations of thought in the painter's mind, 14, 297, human sentiment being essential, 14, 128; it sets nature's facts and the artist's thoughts, 3, 133, 5, 187 seq.; in mere natural-history painting, the artist is the spectator's horse, in the l.-painting the spectator's friend, 3, 133, 14, 2; it is the (i.) representation of natural phenomena in direct relation to humanity, 22, 17, 15, 438 (e.g. by Turner, q.v.), 22, 67-70; (ii.) such representation being thoughtful and dispassionate, requiring the depth and feeling of soul, 22, 12, 17-19, 58, 33, 534-5, the power of l.-painting dependent on human emotion and sympathy, 7, 258-9, 6, 19, 14, 128, and recognition of death essential to true l., 7, 265, 22, 65

(Principles. [References under this head might be indefinitely multiplied, as the whole of Mod. P. has its main subject is more or less relevant; see, therefore, the article in the Index on Turner. The references here given are collected in order to bring out R.'s main principles (deducible from "Definitions"), especially upon some points with regard to which he is often supposed to have been shaken with an uncertain or inconsistent voice: on this subject, see notes at 3, 25 n., 624 n., 5, 1v., 3, xvii.]

The essence of l. (as of other forms of art) is an expression of the artist's soul, the record of his impressions, 5, 169-91, 6, 276, 11, xvii.-xix., 3, 203 (therefore art is to be ranked great according to the greatness of the ideas it conveys, 3, 92, 11, xix.). The landscape artist must therefore free himself from the formalisms of the schools, 11, xviii., xx.—recipes for conventional landscapes, 3, 135 n., 6, 358-9—Turner and the neo-Raphaelites alike praised because they did so, 175, 12, 359-60; but, on the other hand, his impressions must be founded on true perceptions and an imagination which pierces to the heart of things, 11, xviii. Art cannot give the whole truth of nature—e.g. colour and light cannot be equally and truly represented, 6, 48 seq.—there must be selection of truths, 3, 163, 168, the truths expressed by Turner being higher than those of the imitators, 11, xx. There is topographical truth and imaginative, 6, 27 seq., 35; but to make his impressions valuable, the artist must paint what he loves, 4, 323, and paint it for love of the scene, not for sake of the picture, 5, 409, 22, 20. Also, to obtain the right to give free play to the imagination, the artist must train himself by the study of nature, rejecting nothing, selecting nothing, and scorning nothing, 3, 623-4. Truth of form is essential, 3, 25, ideal character and specific truth, 3, 25-7; generalization is fatal, 3, 27-8, 7, 90, 11, 208 and n. Finish and detail, 3, 33-5, 341 (finish in Bellini, Titian, Botticelli, 22, 18-19; see also Cima), fullness of nature essential to, 3, 333, which can only be rendered by mystery, hence two opposite errors, 3, 341 n.
